JOHN DONNE

He was of stature moderately tall; of a straight and equally proportioned body, to which all his words and actions gave an unexpressible addition of comelinesse.

His aspect was cheerfull, and such as gave a silent testimony of a cleere knowing soule, and of a conscience at peace with it selfe.

His melting eye shewed he had a soft heart, full of noble pity, of too brave a spirit to offer injuries, and too much a Christian, not to pardon them in others.

His fancie was un-imitable high, equalled by his great wit, both being made usefull by a commanding judgement.

His mind was liberall, and unwearied in the search of knowledge, with which his vigorous soule is now satisfied, and employed in a continuall praise of that God that first breathed it into his active body, which once was a Temple of the holy Ghost, and is now become a small quantity of Christian dust. But I shall see it re-inanimated.

IZAAK WALTON

*This was for youth, Strength, Mirth, and wit that Time
Most count their golden Age; but 'twas not thine.
Thine was thy later yeares, so much refined
From youths Droffe, Mirth, & wit; as thy pure mind
Thought (like the Angels;) nothing but the Praise
Of thy Creator, in those last, best Dayes.*

*Wimes this Booke, (thy Embleme) which begins
With Love; but ends, with Sighes, & Teares for sinns.*

GENERAL PREFACE

No complete bibliography of Donne's works has previously been undertaken, and I feel confident that this book will be found of use by students of Donne's writings and by collectors of the original editions. I hope it may also be of value to all those who take more than a casual interest in Donne, and to bibliographers in general.

The material that I have used has been drawn mainly from the following sources: the chief public libraries in England and Scotland; the college libraries in Cambridge and Oxford; some of the cathedral libraries; and the private collections of members of the Baskerville Club. In the case of some rare books I have also recorded copies in other private collections in England and America, and a few from sale catalogues. I have myself seen almost all the copies recorded as having been found in London, Cambridge, and Oxford.

The two books, which have been of greater assistance to me than any others, are Mr Edmund Gosse's Life and Letters of John Donne and Professor Grierson's edition of Donne's poems; I am also indebted to these authors for encouragement and help.

I wish to record here my gratitude to all those Librarians whose courtesy has rendered available to me so much of the material upon which this bibliography is founded; also to Miss Henrietta C. Bartlett of New York for her kindness in examining on my behalf those editions of Donne's works which are in the libraries of Mr Beverly Chew and Mr W. A. White.

The proof sheets have been read by Mr Francis Jenkinson, Mr Charles Sayle, Mr A. T. Bartholomew, Mr Cosmo Gordon, and Mr H. G. Aldis, and I am deeply grateful to these gentlemen for the numerous and useful suggestions which they have made. I am indebted to Miss E. M. Spearing for some important corrections in the section dealing with the Sermons.

The system of bibliographical description that I have used is, I hope, clear enough to need no explanation.

PSEUDO-MARTYR

PSEUDO-MARTYR

Bibliographical Preface

The Pseudo-martyr belongs to the year 1609, and was the second controversial work composed by Donne, though it was the first to be printed. According to Walton (Life, 1658, pp. 37—38) it was written by Donne at the command of King James, and was completed within six weeks. Mr Gosse points out, however, that this story is probably untrue. In his dedication Donne writes—"Of my boldnesse in this addresse, I most humbly beseech your Maiestie, to admit this excuse, that having observed, how much your Maiestie had vouchsafed to descend to a conversation with your Subiects, by way of your Bookes, I also conceiv'd an ambition, of ascending to your presence, by the same way"; it is unlikely that he would have written in this manner, had the book been composed expressly at the King's command. Further, a passage in the Advertisement shews that the Table of the Chapters had been in circulation for a considerable period before the completion of the book, and though the last two chapters mentioned in it were never written, Donne still allowed their headings to appear in the Table. "I have abstained," he writes, "from handling the two last Chapters upon divers reasons; whereof one is, that these Heads having beene caried about, many moneths, and thereby quarrelled by some, and desired by others, I was willing to give the Booke a hasty dispatch, that it might cost no man much time, either in expecting before it came, or in reading, when it was come. But a more principall reason was, that since the two last Chapters depend upon one another, and have a mutuall Relation, I was not willing to undertake one, till I might persevere through both. And from the last chapter it became me to abstaine, till I might understand their purposes, who were formerly engaged in the same businesse."

The greater part of the work is now chiefly of historical interest, and the book has never been reprinted; but the Preface to the Priestes and Jesuits contains some interesting autobiographical passages. A more extended account of the book will be found in Gosse, i. 245—254.

Donne's book was perhaps too closely reasoned and too calmly written to admit of a reply being easily framed, and none was published until 1613; in that year was published a work by Thomas Fitzherbert in which a long reply to the Pseudo-martyr is to be found. This book, which is not recorded by Donne's biographers, has the following title:

A supplement to the discuffion of M. D. Barlowes anfwere To the Iudgment of a Catholike Englishman &c. interrupted by the death of the Author F. Robert Persons of the Society of Iesus...And By the way is briefly censured M. Iohn Dunnes Booke, intituled Pseudo-martyr...By F. T....Permissu Superiorum. M.DC.XIII.

The answer to Pseudo-martyr occupies pp. 86—110 (Chap. II §§ 30—78). The Pseudo-martyr is also referred to by John Boys, Dean of Canterbury, in his work—An exposition of all the principall scriptures vsed in our English Liturgie. Together with a reason why the Church did chuse the same... London...1622. "I will not meddle," he writes (p. 277), "with the cobwebs of learning in the Schoole, which have more wit then Art, yet more Art then use; nor with the distorted and idle glosses of the Canonists: he that list may burthen his memory with a shipfull of their fooleries, accuratly collected by the penner of Pseudomartyr, cap. 10."

Note: The Table of the Chapters gives the headings of fourteen chapters; the book, however, contains only twelve of these, the last two never having been written for reasons which the author explains in the Advertisement (see my preface). The book is very carelessly printed and contains a large number of misprints in addition to those more serious ones recorded by Donne in the errata. CONCLAVE IGNATI

CONCLAVE IGNATI

Bibliographical Preface

The Conclave Ignati or Ignatius his Conclave, the third of Donne's controversial writings, was composed and published in 1611. Neither of the Latin editions is dated, but Mr Gosse has shewn conclusively (i. 257) from internal evidence that the work belongs to that year. It is a vigorous and amusing satire, but except in Mr Gosse's book (loc. cit.) it has received very little notice from Donne's biographers. Two Latin editions were printed in 1611. One of these, a duodecimo, has no imprint, and may have been printed in London or abroad; it is extremely rare, only two copies being known to me. The other is a thin quarto, which was printed at Hanau; this, too, is very rare and is recorded here for the first time. The first edition of the English version of the satire was also published in 1611, and three more editions were issued in 1626, 1634, and 1635. The English version was reprinted with the date 1653 with the Juvenilia in the volume of 1652, and the Latin version was reprinted in 1680; since that date Donne's satire has not been reprinted in either form.

The earlier issues of the Conclave Ignati were anonymous, but in the three English editions issued after Donne's death his name appears on the title-page; it is omitted, however, from the Latin reprint of 1680. Donne himself, as he implies in the preface, regarded the book as too undignified a production to be publicly acknowledged, but doubtless the authorship was well known to his contemporaries. In the volume of 1652 the editor, John Donne the younger, describes the Ignatius his Conclave on the general title-page as "lately found among his [the author's] own Papers," and appears to ignore the previous issues; but this was evidently only for purposes of sale.

SERMONS

SERMONS

Bibliographical Preface

Donne had taken orders at the instigation of King James in January, 1615; he was appointed Dean of St Paul's in November, 1621, and in this capacity became one of the most celebrated preachers of his time. The earliest of his sermons that has survived with a date was preached on April 30, 1615; his last sermon was preached before King Charles on February 25, 1631, and was soon afterwards printed under the title of *Death's duell*¹.

Six of Donne's sermons were printed during his lifetime between 1622 and 1627; seven more, including the Death's duell, were printed soon after his death, and later, in 1640, 1649, and 1660, three folio volumes containing 154 sermons were issued by his son, John Donne, D.C.L.² These volumes included the seven posthumous sermons just mentioned, but the remaining 147, with the exception of one which had been issued anonymously in 1638, had not been printed before. Other sermons have survived in MS.³ but have not yet been printed. Those sermons which were printed by Donne during his lifetime were also collected by him in successive volumes containing Three Sermons (1623), Four Sermons (1625), and Five Sermons

¹ This is stated by Walton to have been preached on the first Sunday in Lent. Miss E. M. Spearing has pointed out to me that this fell on Feb. 25 in 1631⁹, and not, as stated by Mr Gosse, on Feb. 12.

² See pp. 146—147 of present work.

³ A collection, which was in the library of the late Prof. Dowden, is now in the possession of a member of the Baskerville Club, Mr Wilfred Merton.

(1626); these volumes were not reprints in the ordinary sense, but consisted of the sheets of the individual sermons as first issued bound up together, with a general title-page substituted for the title-page of the first sermon. The sermons also occur bound up together by their original owners; one such volume in the library of Pembroke College, Cambridge, containing all the sermons issued in quarto up to 1634, was evidently collected by Izaak Walton, whose autograph appears in it in two places¹. The great majority of the sermons were reprinted by Alford in his edition of 1839.

The literary value of Donne's sermons, particularly in relation to his poetry, has only recently been fully realised²; after he had taken orders he wrote but few poems, and his sermons consequently became his chief means of expression. According to Walton he did not read his sermons from the pulpit, but committed them to memory and wrote them out afterwards in a form ready for publication³. An idea of the manner in which he recast his sermons may be gained by comparing the text of the sermon printed by Milbourne in 1638 from an unauthorised copy with that of the same sermon as it was printed in the folio of 1660. Walton's description of Donne's delivery of the first sermon, which he preached before the King, must be accepted as a true estimate of his great power as a preacher. "Preaching the word so," Walton writes, "as shewed his own heart was possest with those very thoughts, and joyes that he laboured to distil into others. A Preacher in earnest, weeping sometimes for his Auditory, sometimes with them; alwaies preaching to himself like an Angell from a cloud, but in none; carrying some, as St. Paul was, to Heaven in holy raptures, and inticing others by a sacred art and Courtship to amend their lives; here picturing a vice so as to make it ugly to those that practised it; and a vertue so, as to make it be loved even by those that lov'd it not, and all this with a most particular grace and an unexpressible addition of comeliness." (Walton's Life of Donne, 1658, pp. 47—48.)

Collation: A⁴ B—F⁴ G²; 26 leaves.

Contents: A1 title; A2 dedication To the Masters of the Bench, and the rest of the Honourable Societie of Lincolnes Inne; A3 The Prayer before the Sermon; [A4 cancelled]; B1—G1a (pp. 1—41) text; G1b—G2 blank.

Note: On John, x. 22. Not reprinted in the folios, or by Alford. A4 has been cancelled in all the copies known to me, including those bound up in the Three Sermons, etc. Notwithstanding the fact that the catchword on A3b corresponds with the first word on B1a, it is evident from the sewing that the signatures A2 and A3 have not been misprinted; presumably the cancelled leaf was a blank.

SERMON ON ACTS, i. 8.

4^o. 1624

Title (within double lines): A fermon vpon the eighth verse of the first Chapter Of The Acts Of The Apostles. Preached To the Honourable Company of the Virginian Plantation, 13. Nouemb. 1622. By Iohn Donne Deane of Saint Pauls, London. [rule]

London, Printed for Thomas Iones. 1624.

Collation : A—G⁴ ; 28 leaves.

Contents : A1 blank ; A2 title ; A3 introductory address To the honourable companie of the Virginian Plantation ; A4—G4a (pp. 1—49) text ; G4b blank.

Note : A reprint of no. 15, in which the errata (noted on G4a of the first issue) have been corrected. Most of the copies known to me occur in the Four sermons of 1625 and the Five sermons of 1626. In four of these by an error of the printer the first page of the text and the second page of the introductory address have been transposed. In the fifth example, which occurs in Mr Edmund Gosse's copy of the Five sermons, these pages are in their right positions.

S3 subtitle to A sermon Upon the xxii verse of the v Chapter of John; S4—X3a (pp. 1—23) text; X3b blank;

X4 subtitle to A sermon Upon the xv verse of the viii Chapter of John; Y1—Z4 (pp. 1—16) text.

Note: These sermons were all reprinted in the Fifty Sermons, 1649 (no. 30), where they are numbered 28, 29, 3, 35, 12, and 13 respectively. They are also printed by Alford, iv. 490, 512, 30, v. 28, iv. 191, 206. The fourth is stated in the Fifty Sermons to have been preached on February 21, 1611; but this is obviously a mistake, since Donne had at that date not yet taken orders. The third sermon was also reprinted in Illustrations of the Liturgy and Ritual of the United Church of England and Ireland. By James Brogden, M.A. (London, 1842, 8°), vol. iii. pp. 161—182. These sermons sometimes occur separately or two together, and they may have been so issued.

SERMON ON ECCLES. xii. 1.

8°. 1638

Title (within double lines): Sapientia Clamitans, Wifdome crying out to Sinners to returne from their evill wayes: contained in three pious and learned Treatifes, Viz.

- I. Of Christs fervent love to bloody Ierusalem.
- II. Of Gods just hardning of Pharoah, when he had filled up the measure of his iniquitie.
- III. Of Mans timely Remembring of his Creator.

Heretofore communicated to some friends in written copies: but now published for the generall good. [rule] By William Milbourne Priest. [text from Ezech. 33. 11 between rules]

London, Printed by I. Haviland, for R. Milbourne at the Unicorne neere Fleet-bridge. 1638.

Collation: A² B—X⁸; 162 leaves.

Contents: A1 blank (?); A2 title; B1—G8a (pp. 1—95) sermon I; G8b blank; H1 subtitle to sermon II; H2—R5 (pp. 99—250) sermon II; R6 subtitle to sermon III; R7—X8a (pp. 253—319) sermon III; X8b blank.

Sermon: The third sermon (pp. 251—319) is by Donne.

Subtitle (within double lines): Mans timely remembring of his Creator; or An exposition delivered in a Sermon upon Ecclesiastes 12. 1.

Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth

[ornament between rules] London, Printed by John Haviland, for Robert Milbourne. 1638.

Note: These sermons do not seem to have been identified before. The first two are by Dr Jackson¹; the third, by Donne, was reprinted as sermon 19 in XXVI Sermons, 1660 (no. 31), where it has the title: A Sermon of Valediction at my going into Germany, at Lincolnes-Inne, April 18. 1619. The text of 1660 differs very considerably from that of 1638; probably the sermon was rewritten by Donne for publication after the first written copy had been "communicated to some friends." There is a MS. copy of this sermon in the Bodleian Library (Ashmol. 781, ff. 1—11).

The device used on the title-page both of this volume and of the Fifty sermons, representing Daniel praying, was first used by G. Simson in 1597. It probably passed to Miles Fletcher (1611—1664) in 1624, and was also used by his son James (1649—1667). It is recorded as no. 308 in McKerrow's Printers' and Publishers' Devices, London, 1913.

[9. omitted]	18. Prov. 8. 17

Note: This volume was very carelessly edited and printed. It actually contains only twenty-four, instead of twenty-six, sermons; sermon 9 is left out altogether, but this omission is neutralised by the fact that under sermon 10 are included two sermons on the same text; on the other hand, two of the sermons are printed twice over, nos. 16 and 17 being merely repetitions of nos. 5 and 3. The collation, printed above, will be seen to be very erratic; three of the quires, Nn, Oo, and Ddd, contain six, instead of four, leaves, and two signatures, R (? with sermon 9) and Eee are omitted altogether. The pagination is very faulty, although the right number of pages, 411, is finally arrived at. The numbering runs as follows: B1—Q4 are numbered 1—120; S1—Aa4a, 129—183 (Aa4b is blank and has no pagination); Bb1—Kk4, 177—232; Ii1—Qq4, 241—296; Pp1—Ddd6, 285—392; Fff1—Ggg4a, 397—411. There are in addition several minor misprints in the pagination. Sermon no. 26 was first published as Death's duell, 1632 (no. 24). The sermons have all been reprinted by Alford, i—vi.

The editor has added a note to the preface on B2a which runs as follows: "By the Dates of these Sermons, the Reader may easily collect, that although they are the last that are published, they were the first that were Preached; and I did purposely select these from amongst all the rest, for, being to finish this Monument, which I was to erect to his Memory, I ought to reserve those materials that were set forth with the best Polish: The Impression consists onely of Five hundred, which will somewhat advance the Price; but the buyer being at liberty, he can receive no prejudice." This note explains the fact that the XXVI Sermons is considerably rarer than the two volumes of 1640 and 1649; it is also a smaller volume than these two, measuring about 29 × 19 cm. as compared with 34 × 23 cm.¹ It was printed by Thomas Newcomb (1649—1681), and was twice reissued with new title-pages in 1661 (see nos. 32 and 32a). The curious device of two hands actuating pumps, with motto Dum premor, attollor, which is used on the title-pages of all the issues of this volume, is not mentioned by McKerrow in his Printers' and Publishers' Devices, London, 1913; but I am informed by Mr Sayle that it was used for J. Partridge in 1630, by J. R. for G. Thomason and O. Pullen in 1645, and again by T. N. in 1670.

DEVOTIONS

DEVOTIONS

Bibliographical Preface

Donne composed the volume of meditations, expostulations, and prayers, known as his Devotions, during a serious illness, which confined him to his bed during the last months of the year 1623. At one period he was reduced to a very low state and was not expected to recover. Nevertheless his brain was active, and he sought to pass the time away by recording his states of mind and introspective thoughts; the result is a most remarkable and interesting book. It was printed soon after his recovery early in 1624, and a letter¹ to Sir Robert Ker written during February or March, 1624, has been preserved, which appears to have accompanied the proofs² of the Devotions and asks for advice concerning the projected dedication to the Prince of Wales. Several other letters have survived, which were sent with gift-copies of the book; these were addressed to the Queen of Bohemia (Tobie Matthew collection, no. 5), to a lady of the court of Bohemia (Gosse, no. 22), to the Duke of Buckingham (Tobie Matthew collection, no. 9), and, probably, to the Earl of Dorset (ibid. no. 10). The book seems to have been a popular one, and it passed through three editions (five issues) during Donne's lifetime; two more editions with frontispieces engraved by Marshall were published during the seven years succeeding his death. The Devotions were reprinted by Pickering in 1840 and by Talboys in 1841, but the work has not been issued since then and is very little known at the present time. I do not know of any translation or foreign edition of the Devotions, but the following statement is made by Morhof in his Polyhistor in the course of his short account of Donne's works: "Scripsit et Meditationes super morbo suo sacras, quæ in Linguam Belgicam conversæ et Amstelodami 1655 in 12° editæ sunt²." This statement is sufficiently definite to make it probable that such a translation does exist; if so, it is probably by Sir Constantine Huyghens, who had already translated some of Donne's poems (see no. 85).

JUVENILIA

Bibliographical Preface

Donne's Juvenilia are clever and entertaining trifles, which were probably written before 1600 during the more wanton period of their author's life. Owing to their scurrilous nature they could not be published during Donne's lifetime, but in 1632, shortly after his death, part of them were licensed by Sir Henry Herbert. The licences were granted on October 25, 1632, but on November 14 an order of inquiry was delivered at the King's command by the Bishop of London calling upon Sir Henry Herbert to explain before the Board of the Star Chamber his reasons "why hee warranted the booke of D. Duns paradoxes to bee printed¹." The inquiry, however, was ineffectual in preventing the publication of the book, the title-page of which is dated 1633. It is not known through what channels the publisher, Henry Seyle, obtained possession of the text, but it is probable that the publication was quite unauthorised, and took place even without the knowledge of John Donne, jun., who, in his edition of 1652, makes no reference to any previous issues. Although the King did not succeed in stopping the publication of the Juvenilia, the licences were withdrawn, so that when the demand for the book encouraged the publication of a second edition during the same year, the publisher took upon himself to issue it unlicensed; not content with this he even added to the first problem, "Why have bastards best fortunes?," which was particularly insulting to the Court, twenty-three lines which had not appeared in the first edition. It is possible that steps were taken to suppress this edition, which is now considerably rarer than its predecessor.

In 1652 the younger Donne, in the course of his exploitation of his father's writings, issued an authorised edition of the Juvenilia, in which he increased the number of the paradoxes from eleven to twelve and that of the problems from ten to seventeen, even the offensive passages in the first problem being now allowed to remain. To these he added two "Characters," "An Essay of Valour," "A Sheaf of Miscellany Epigrams," a reprint of Ignatius his Conclave, and, finally, the Essays in Divinity. The Epigrams purport to have been written by Donne in Latin and to have been translated into English by Jasper Mayne, D.D.¹ They may have been printed by the younger Donne in good faith, as it seems to be certain that Donne's epigrammata mea Latina once existed²; but the epigrams attributed to him in this volume are certainly spurious and may well have been composed as well as translated by Jasper Mayne, who was an unprincipled though witty divine (see Gosse, i. 16). The Essays in Divinity had been printed in 1651 for a different publisher, but, as is explained elsewhere (see p. 69), they rarely, if ever, occur as a separate volume; for the younger Donne sought to temper the secularity, and even obscenity, of the Juvenilia by issuing them in company with the Essays in Divinity and in this way to invest the volume with an altogether fictitious respectability. This fact has not previously been noticed, although it is laboured by the editor in his preface: "I humbly here present unto your Honor, Things of the least and greatest weight, that ever fell from my Father's Pen; which yet, are not so light that they seem vain; nor of such weight, that they may appear dull or heavy unto the Reader. The Primroses and Violets of the Spring entertain us with more Delight, than the Fruits of the Autumn; and through our Gardens we pass into our Groves and Orchards; preserving, and candying the Buds and Blossomes of some ¹ The epigrams were originally advertised by the publisher Moseley in a catalogue of his books as Fasciculus Poematum et Epigrammatum Miscelaneorum Authore Johanne Dome [sic] D.D. Englished by Jasper Maine, Doctor in Divinity. This may account for the fact that Lowndes incorrectly records a separate issue of the Epigrams, dated 1632.

² Gosse, i. 17.

Trees, admitting them amongst our Delicacies & Sweet-meats; when as, the riper Fruit serves onely to quicken and provoke our Appetite to a coarser Fare....They are the Essays of two Ages, where you may see the quickness of the first and the firmness of the latter....Here then you have the entertainment of the Authors Youth; and the Assumption of his Wit when it was employed in more Heavenly things." Beyond the facts that the volumes usually occur bound up together and that the original dedication of the Essays in Divinity has been cancelled, there is nothing in the bibliographical constitution of the whole to shew that they actually form one volume; but the passages quoted above make quite evident the editor's intention.

Even in 1652 the Paradoxes and Problemes were not printed entire, for another problem, entitled "Why was Sir Walter Raleigh thought the fittest man to write the history of these times?," has been preserved at Oxford (Tanner MSS. 299, f. 32), the copier stating that it "was so bitter that his son, Jack Donne LL.D., thought fit not to print it with the rest"; it is printed by Gosse, ii. 52.

The Juvenilia have not been reprinted since 1652.

BIATHANATOS

BIATHANATOS

Bibliographical Preface

Biathanatos is the earliest of Donne's controversial writings. His neurotic temperament had for many years been fascinated by the thought of suicide and in this work, written probably in 1608, he sought by the most ingenious casuistry to justify the act of self-destruction. "Whensoever any affliction assailes me," he wrote in the preface, "mee thinks I have the keyes of my prison in mine owne hand, and no remedy presents it selfe so soone to my heart, as mine own sword. Often Meditation of this hath wonne me to a charitable interpretation of their action, who dy so: and provoked me a little to watch and exagitate their reasons, which pronounce so peremptory judgements upon them....And though I know, that the malitious prejudged man, and the lazy affectors of ignorance, will use the same calumnies and obtrectations towards me, (for the voyce and sound of the Snake and Goose is all one) yet because I thought, that as in the poole of Bethsaida, there was no health till the water was troubled, so the best way to finde the truth in this matter, was to debate and vexe it, I abstained not for feare of mis-interpretation from this undertaking. Our stomachs are not now so tender, and queasie, after so long feeding upon solid Divinity, nor we so umbragious and startling, having been so long enlightened in Gods path, that wee should thinke any truth strange to us, or relapse into that childish age, in which a Councell in France forbad Aristotles Metaphysiques, and punished with Excommunication the ex-cribing, reading, or having that booke." Donne was unwilling either to publish or to destroy this curious and characteristic product of his brain, and it was therefore handed round to his friends in manuscript; one such copy, which was given to Lord Herbert of Cherbury in 1619, is now in the Bodleian Library, another was sent to Sir Robert Ker in the same year, and the letters which accompanied these two copies have survived (Letters, 1651, nos. 7 and 8). His desire was that after his death the book should still be preserved but not published; his son nevertheless assumed the responsibility of making it public, and it was duly licensed on September 20, 1644. The title-page of the first issue is not dated and appears to be unfinished, but this was probably an oversight on the part of the printer. This issue is somewhat rare, the majority of copies containing the title-page which was substituted for the original one in 1648. Several gift-copies of the Biathanatos are known to me; one of these, in the possession of Mr S. G. Dunne, was presented to "Ye Rt. Honourable the Kinsmoll" i.e. Lady Kingsmell; two others, now in the Cambridge University Library, contain letters in the younger Donne's autograph, which are but little known¹, and are of sufficient interest to warrant their being printed here:

1. For his much honored frinde Mr Lee at the Cockpitt

Sr

I take the bouldnesse to present to your hands this booke, hopinge that it may bee welcome to you, euen for the Patrones sake, who has receaued it soe nobly, that, I cannot doubt, but that all his frinds, will entertaine it as somethinge that belongs to my Lorde Herbert, and, has lyen still these fiftie last years, to expect a Patrone noble enough to entertaine a Peece that is an absolute Originall, and, I thinke, drawen by noe very ill a hande.

my reason of presentinge it to you, at this time ; For, since I liued in this Parish I haue published a Volume of 80 Sermons preached by my Father, and haue prepared 60 more, which are licensed, and entered in the Printers halle, which is, as farr as I can driue them vntill the times allter¹; I was encouraged to vndertake this worke, by the learnedest men in the kingdome, of all professions, and was often told, that I shoud deserue better by doinge soe, then by keepinge them to my owne vse, for by this meanes, I did not only preach to the present adge, but to our childrens children ; Sr, I write this to you, that you may iudg what a sad condition a Scholler is in, when at a publicke vestry, in this Parish, I was told by a pittifull ignorant Baker, I was an idle man and neuer preached your humble seruant

Jo: Donne

A fourth presentation copy, with a letter on the fly-leaves dated Couent Garden, London, Julie 29, 1649, was sent to "Sr Constantine Huygens, Knight," translator of Donne's poems (see no. 85); this copy belonged formerly to Dr Grosart. A fifth copy, also accompanied by a letter, was presented to "J. Marckham" (Cat. of Heber Lib., pt. viii, no. 728).

Biathanatos was reprinted by an anonymous publisher in 1700, but since that date its publication has not been undertaken².

ESSAYS IN DIVINITY

ESSAYS IN DIVINITY

Bibliographical Preface

The Essays in Divinity were written by Donne about the year 1614 or 1615. The editor, John Donne the younger, states in his preface "that they were the voluntary sacrifices of severall hours, when he had many debates betwixt God and himself, whether he were worthy, and competently learned to enter into Holy Orders," but Mr Gosse regards them (ii. 63) as nothing more than scholastic exercises and conjectures that "they were written to be laid before the Archbishop as a proof of the soundness of Donne's orthodoxy and the breadth of his learning." The four prayers, however, with which the volume ends, have a much greater emotional and biographical value, and are a more genuine record than the Essays of Donne's transition from a lay to a clerical life.

The volume was printed in 1651, but it is doubtful if it was ever issued separately. It almost invariably occurs bound up with the Juvenilia of 1652 under the title of Paradoxes, problems, essayes, characters etc., and as is shewn elsewhere (p. 50) formed part of this volume. It is nevertheless quite possible that a few copies were issued separately in 1651, although I have not yet seen a volume in contemporary binding containing the Essays alone; it is likely that such copies would have the leaf A3 intact, which has been cancelled in all the examples known to me and may have contained the original dedication of the Essays in Divinity, addressed, perhaps, not to Lord Newport, to whom the volume of 1652 is inscribed, but to some other patron of the younger Donne. Copies of the Essays occur separately in recent bindings, but this is probably owing to the fact that their owners believed them to form an independent volume, and they are of no value as evidence of a separate issue¹.

The Essays in Divinity have only once been reprinted, edited by Dr Jessopp, in 1855.

LETTERS

Bibliographical Preface

The great majority of those of Donne's letters that have survived, have been preserved through the energy of his son, John Donne, D.C.L. A few had been printed by Marriott in the early editions of the poems. Later, in 1651, the younger Donne issued a volume containing one hundred and twenty-nine Letters to severall persons of honour; it would be untrue to say that these letters were edited by him, since they were merely thrown together in any order, for the most part without dates, and were in addition very carelessly printed. Nevertheless they have much literary and biographical importance and become of great interest when the patient scholarship of a present-day editor has assigned to them their proper dates and positions in relation to the events of Donne's life. This necessary editing has been done by Mr Gosse, and in his Life and Letters of Donne, London, 1899 (no. 126), the letters can be read with more appreciation than had previously been possible. The younger Donne further increased our obligations to him by "editing" in 1660 with equal carelessness a collection of letters which had been made by Sir Tobie Matthew; this collection includes, among a number of letters to and from Donne, twenty-five from him which had not been printed before, and the majority of these have been incorporated by Mr Gosse in his book already mentioned. Nine new letters were printed by Tomlins in his annotated edition of Walton's Life, 1852. Finally Mr Gosse himself was able to add from manuscript sources eighteen letters which had not previously been printed, so that his volumes contain the only authoritative collection of Donne's letters that has yet been made. A few more letters, also used by Mr Gosse, have been gathered from other sources and are recorded in the entries following. There are still a few more which have not been printed; the copyright of these has been acquired by the Clarendon Press and they will be included in Professor H. J. C. Grierson's projected edition of Donne's letters¹.

¹ Contemporary copies of five long letters by Donne (four closely written pages, folio) were sold at Puttick and Simpson's on Dec. 19, 1855. I do not know whether these were published letters or not, or their present whereabouts.

52 POEMS.

4°. 1633

Note : This collection was edited by John Donne, jun., whose name was added to the title-page of the issue of 1692 (see no. 62). "Sir Tobie Matthew was son of Dr. Tobie Matthew, Archbishop of York; he was born in Oxford in 1578, while his father was Dean of Christchurch. During his travels he was reduced to the Romish religion by Father Parsons. This occasioned his absence from England from 1607 to 1617, when he had leave to return. He was ordered to leave it again in Oct. 1618; but in 1622 was recalled to assist in the match with Spain; and on account of his endeavours to promote it was knighted by King James at Royston, Oct. 10, 1623. He was much cultivated by Lord Bacon, and translated the Essays into Italian. He died at Ghent, Oct. 13, 1655." (Transcribed from a MS. note on the fly-leaves of the ULC copy.) Three of Donne's letters (nos. 1—3) in this collection have not been reprinted.

OCCASIONAL PIECES

OCCASIONAL PIECES

Bibliographical Preface

In this section I have included only those few pieces, which are certainly by Donne and were printed in various books during his lifetime. A few other poems by Donne were printed in books published between 1640 and 1675, and these I have recorded in the footnotes to the section containing the collected Poems. A number of other poems, which have been attributed to Donne, though actually spurious or of doubtful authenticity, are to be found in other publications of the seventeenth century, but I have not considered these to be of sufficient importance to be given a place in this bibliography; they will, for the most part, be found recorded in Professor Grierson's edition of the poems.

ANNIVERSARIES

ANNIVERSARIES

Bibliographical Preface

The First Anniversarie was composed by Donne in memory of Elizabeth Drury¹, daughter of his patron Sir Robert Drury of Hawsted in the county of Suffolk. The Funerall Elegie is believed to have been written in 1610 at the time of her death and the Anatomie of the World a year later, in 1611. To the praise of the Dead and the Anatomy is not by Donne and was probably written by Joseph Hall, who was rector of Hawsted from 1600 to 1608. The second Anniversarie was written early in 1612, but again only Of the progres of the Soule was by Donne, The Harbinger to the Progres being by Hall. Donne's name does not appear in any of the editions recorded below, but their authorship was doubtless well known, and Donne refers to the poems in a letter to George Gerrard, dated April 14, 1612². According to Grierson these editions were printed with increasing carelessness, but when the Anniversaries were reprinted in the collected Poems of 1633 they were more carefully edited; they also appear in all later editions of the Poems. All the separate editions of the Anniversaries contain marginal notes; these were somewhat imperfectly reproduced in 1633 and in later editions were omitted altogether. For further details concerning the Anniversaries, see Gosse, i. 273—278, and Grierson, ii. 178—189, who gives facsimile reproductions of all the title-pages.

COLLECTED POEMS

COLLECTED POEMS

Bibliographical Preface

The texts of the various editions of the collected Poems have been exhaustively dealt with in the recent Oxford edition by Professor Grierson; he gives also type-facsimiles of all the title-pages, but he only mentions some of the more strictly bibliographical details, which will be found recorded under the entries following. Very few of Donne's poems were published during his lifetime (see section on Occasional Pieces), but a large number of MS. copies were in circulation, and between twenty and thirty of these, which are all described by Grierson, ii. lxxix—cxii, have survived¹. Donne died in March, 1631, and the publisher, John Marriot, seems to have entered upon the preparation of his poems for the press very shortly afterwards, helped, Grierson conjectures, by Henry King, Bishop of Chichester. The poems were registered at Stationers' Hall on September 13, 1632, and the following entry was made:

13^o Septembris 1632

John Marriot. Entred for his Copy vnder the handes of Sir Henry Herbert and both the Wardens a booke of verses and Poems (the five satires, the first, second, Tenth, Eleventh, and Thirteenth Elegies being excepted) and these before excepted to be his when he bringes lawfull authority vj^d

written by Doctor John Dunn

(Arber's Transcripts, 1877, iv. * 249)

Another entry is found shortly afterwards :

31^o octobris [1632]

John Marriott. Entred for his Copy vnder the hands of Sir Henry Herbert and Master Aspley warden The five Satires written by Doctor J: Dun these being excepted in his last entrance vj^d (ibid. iv. 261)

There is no further entry, however, concerning the excepted elegies. The first edition of the Poems, dated 1633, is, according to Grierson, the most trustworthy of the original editions, though the arrangement is somewhat chaotic. In 1635 the pieces were rearranged and a considerable number were added, but the additions contain a large proportion of spurious poems. Two more were added in 1649 and several unimportant pieces in 1650. Several more were added in 1669, but of these only two are by Donne. In 1650 the younger Donne had secured control of the publication and the edition of that year contains a characteristic dedication from his pen. Of all the seventeenth century editions that of 1633 occurs most commonly and it contains, as has been said, the best text; the edition of 1669 is the most complete, but it contains many very bad readings and a large number of spurious pieces. Some of Donne's poems were translated into Dutch by Sir Constantine Huyghens early in the seventeenth century, though the translations were not published until 1672 (see no. 85); no other foreigner has yet repeated the attempt.

After Tonson's edition of 1719 very slight notice was taken of Donne's poems during the eighteenth century and, indeed, no edition of importance was published until they were edited by Grosart for the Fuller Worthies Library in 1872—3. The Grolier Club of New York issued an important edition in 1895 and an exceedingly useful edition was prepared by Mr E. K. Chambers for the Muses' Library in 1896. All previous editions, however, have now been superseded by that edited in 1912 for the Clarendon Press by Professor H. J. C. Grierson, whose scholarship and industry have provided for readers of Donne's poems as good a text as can possibly be expected. A number of poems not previously printed were added successively by Chambers, Gosse, and Grierson.

⁴ This Elegy is omitted from later editions of the poems. Its author is identified by Mr Gosse with Sir Thomas Browne of Norwich (Life of Sir T. B. By E. Gosse. Lond. 1905. 8^o. p. 18), and Grierson (ii. 255) accepts this identification, though there is no evidence in support of it. It seems to me most improbable that the elegy is by Sir Thomas Browne. Possibly it is by the signatory of the Imprimatur of the 80 Sermons, 1640 (see no. 29).

Note : This book appears to have been repeatedly corrected as it passed through the press and consequently it is found in a number of different states. I have not collated in detail the texts of the numerous copies that have been in my hands, but I have applied to most of them a rough test which has served to some extent to differentiate them. This test depends on the three following points :

- i. The signature on the first leaf of The printer to the Understanders is in the earliest copies *, but it was afterwards altered to A.
- ii. Page 8, line 7, has in earlier copies "to see the Prince," but this was altered later to "to see the Princeffe."
- iii. Page 326, third line from bottom, has in earlier copies "Charitably warm'd of thy finnes," and in later copies "Charitably warn'd of thy finnes."

Thus one finds copies on the one hand with sign. *, "to see the Prince," and "Charitably warm'd"; this is the earliest form of all. On the other hand the majority of copies have sign. A, "to see the Princeffe," and "Charitably warn'd." There occur also every possible combination of these three misprints, indicating intermediate states. The pagination, which is faulty, varies in different copies; the mistakes, which occur in a copy of the final form of the book as determined by the above test, are noted in square brackets in the page references of the list of contents given above.

The first quire of the book consists of four leaves: first leaf blank, second leaf title, third and fourth leaves (with sign. A₃ and A₄) the Epistle etc. The two leaves with The printer to the Understanders and Hexastichon Bibliopolae (with sign. A and A₂) are an insertion, and are placed sometimes after the Epistle, but more often in the centre of the first quire, so that the collation then appears to be: [a]₁ blank, [a]₂ title, A₁—A₂ The printer etc., A₃—A₄ Epistle etc., and this has misled some authorities. The correct collation is printed above. Sometimes the two leaves of The printer etc. are omitted altogether.

¹ Also in Walton's Lives, 1670 etc.

² Also in Carew's Poems, 1640.

This edition of the Poems properly contains no portrait, but the engraving by Lombart is found inserted in some copies, or, very rarely, the engraving by Marshall printed on paper of quarto size¹.

This edition and those issued up to 1649 were printed by Miles Fletcher (1611—1664).

POEMS.

8°. 1635

Title: Poems, By J. D. with elegies on the authors death. [double rule]

London Printed by M. F. for John Marriot, and are to be sold at his Shop in St Dunstons Church-yard in Fleet-street. 1635.

Collation: A—Z Aa—Dd⁸; 216 leaves.

Contents: A1 title; A2—A4a The printer to the understanders; A4b Hexastichon Bibliopolae and Hexastichon ad Bibliopolam. Incerti.; A5—A6a Epistle to The Progreffe of the Soule; A6b blank; A7—Bb8 (pp. 1—388) text; Cc1—Dd8a Elegies upon the Author (errata at bottom of Dd8a); Dd8b blank.

Frontispiece: Inserted before A1. A portrait of Donne at the age of 18, engraved by Marshall; the painting from which the engraving was done is not known². A bust of the subject is shewn, within an oval, 8.5 × 6 cm. His dress is plain, but he is represented with long hair and with a large ear-ring in the shape of a cross hanging from his right ear. His right hand is grasping the hilt of his sword. Above the oval, on the left, the engraving is inscribed: Anno Dni. 1591. | ætatis suae. 18.; above, on the right, is a crest with motto: *Antes muerto que mudado*³. Below are eight lines of verse, beginning: This was for youth, Strength, Mirth, and wit, and signed Iz: Wa: [Izaak Walton]. At the bottom, on the left, the engraving is signed: WIll: Marshall. sculpsit. The plate-mark measures 12.3 × 7.7 cm.

² Mr Lawrence Binyon has suggested that it may have been by Nicholas Hilliard, 1537—1619 (Grierson, ii. 134).

³ i.e. Sooner death than change.

36. Elegie on D. D. [by] Sidney Godolphin.	Cc6
37. On Dr. John Donne, late Deane of S. Paules, London [by] I. Chud- leigh ² .	Cc7

Note : In this edition the pieces have been rearranged (see Grierson, ii. lxiii) and there are some changes in the text ; they include all that had appeared in 1633 with the exception of Basse's Epitaph upon Shakespeare, and Thomas Browne's elegy on the author. Of the thirty-seven pieces that have been added twenty-nine are poems supposed to be by Donne ; of these one (no. 17) appears twice and eleven are not accepted by Grierson as genuine. This edition contains therefore seventeen additional poems by Donne. The Hexastichon ad Bibliopolam. Incerti on A4^b is also an addition.

The errata, signed Thine, I[ohn] M[arriot], explain that the Epistle to The Progreffe of the Soule (on A5—A6) should have been printed before the poem at p. 301. There seems, however, to have been an earlier issue in which the errata do not appear. This fact was communicated to me by Miss Henrietta C. Bartlett of New York, who had herself examined an example of this issue in the library of Mr Beverley Chew ; she states that the volume, which, as far as I know, is unique, is in other respects identical with the ordinary issue.

12. [No title] (The heavens rejoyce in motion ; why should I) [Elegy XVII. Variety. 1669]
13. [No title] (He that cannot chuse but love) [Self-love. Chambers]

Note : The sheets B—Aa and Bb—Cc were probably those of the preceding entry or at least were printed from the same type, but the first quire of four leaves was changed ; in addition to the alterations on the title-page the younger Donne's dedication to Lord Craven was substituted for The printer to the understanders, and a third poem, by Ben Jonson, was added on A4b. Furthermore, the additional sheets aa, bb were inserted after Aa8, or, sometimes, in error, after Cc8, so that this volume is very variously composed.

Poems, etc. : As in the edition of 1650 with the addition of the following :

	PAGE
1. Break of day, stanza 1 [spurious ; probably by John Dowland]	17
2. Elegie XIII, ll. 5—44, 57—66, and 83—94	86—89
3. Elegie XVIII [Love's Progress . MS.] ¹	94
4. To his Mistress going to bed [Elegy XIX. Going to bed. MS.]	97
5. Satyre VI (To Sir Nicholas Smyth) [spurious ; probably by Sir John Roe]	138

Note : Printed by Thomas Newcomb (1649—1681). There are numerous changes in the text of this edition. Hazlitt states that pp. 95—98, containing the additional elegies, were suppressed, but I have not yet seen a copy in which this was the case. This edition does not, as is sometimes stated², contain a portrait. Pp. 121, 123, 221 are numbered 221, 213, 291, but with these exceptions the pagination is correct up to p. 304 (U8b); it then becomes very erratic, and the remaining quires are numbered as follows : sign. X is paginated 307—322; sign. Y, 321—336; sign. Z, 377—392; and sign. Aa—Dd, 353—414.

Note : The translations are preceded by one leaf Tot den leser, and two poems, Aen Tefſſſchade and Aen ein' ſchoone Weduwer. Huyghens explains in the note Tot den leser that "Charles I having heard of his intention to translate Dr Donne, 'declared he did not believe that anyone could acquit himself of that task with credit'" (Grierson, ii. lxxvii). This is also referred to by Morhof in his Polybistor (see no. 109) where he writes: "Quorum [Poemata] aliquot in Linguam Belgicam vertit Constantius Hugonius a Carolo secundo Rege sollicitatus, qui inimitabilem Germanis et Belgis hujus viri stylum putabat." For Huyghens's opinion of Donne expressed in a letter to Hooft in 1630 see Grierson (loc. cit.). The translations are also referred to in M. Llewellyn's Men-Miracles, 1646, in a passage the last two lines of which run:

Thus we climbe downwards, and advance as much
As He that turn'd Donne's Poems into Dutch.

WALTON'S LIFE OF DONNE

WALTON'S LIFE OF DONNE

Bibliographical Preface

Walton's Life of Donne, though written with an extraordinary grace and spontaneity, is not to be relied upon for accuracy of detail, in spite of the fact that the author declared in his note To the reader in the edition of 1658: "My desire is to inform and assure you, that shall become my Reader, that in that part of this following discourse, which is onely narration, I either speak my own knowledge, or from the testimony of such as dare do anything rather than speak an untruth." The Life appeared in its first form in the prefatory matter to the 80 Sermons, 1640, which was edited by the younger Donne. Though considerable additions were made in later issues, this original form of the Life remained, except in detail, unaltered. The first separate issue of the Life was published in 1658 and this contained, as Walton says in the dedication, "fewer blemishes and more ornaments than when 'twas first made publique." The dedication was addressed to Sir Robert Holt, grandson of John King, Bishop of London, and nephew of Henry King, Bishop of Chichester, friend and executor of Donne, who warmly commended Walton's Life of Donne in a letter printed at the beginning of the 1670 edition of the Lives. The chief additions made to the Life in 1658 are noted under the entry following.

In 1670 Walton included the Life of Donne in the well-known volume of *Lives*¹, which passed through several editions in the seventeenth century and has been so many times reprinted since ; I have made no attempt to deal with the bibliography of this volume. The actual account of Donne's life underwent very little change in this edition, but the Epistle Dedicatory and the note To the reader were omitted ; instead of these there was inserted an Introduction consisting of the first paragraphs of the Life and a passage from To the reader. The letters printed at the end of the edition of 1658 were omitted, but part of one of them and an extract from a new one were incorporated in the text (see no. 61). There were also added "An hymn to God, my God, in my sickness. March 23, 1630," and Walton's "Elegy on Dr. Donne. April 7, 1632." I have not seen copies of the second and third editions of the Lives, but the fourth edition, published in 1675, contains an important addition in the form of a long account of Donne's vision of his wife seen while he was in Paris in 1612, together with the verses entitled "A Valediction forbidding mourning" (Poems, 1633, no. 100), which he had given her at parting.

An edition of the Lives was edited with important annotations by Thomas Zouch in 1796¹. Further annotations, useful though sometimes rather prolix, were added by T. E. Tomlins to an edition of the Life of Donne published in 1852, which is the only separate reprint of this Life known to me and is therefore described under entry no. 107.

Collation: A—G¹²; 84 leaves.

Contents: A1 blank; A2 title; A3—A9a dedication To my Noble & honoured Friend Sir Robert Holt of Aston, in the County of Warwick, Baronet signed Isaac Walton; A9b blank; A10 To the Reader signed I. W.; A11—F11b (pp. 1—122) The life of John Donne signed I. W.; F11b—G11a (pp. 122—145) four letters from Donne; G11a—G12 (pp. 145—148) An Epitaph written by Dr. Corbet, Bishop of Oxford, on his friend Dr. Donne, and To the Memory of my ever desired Dr. Donne. An Elegy by H. King. B.C.

Frontispiece: Inserted between A1 and A2. A bust of Donne within an oval as in the frontispiece to 80 Sermons, 1640 (no. 29), but without any of the surrounding design; it is printed from the same plate, which has not been retouched, though it shews signs of wear.

Note: Printed by John Grismond II (1639—1666). This edition, which is now very rare, is a reprint of the Life, which had been printed at the beginning of 80 Sermons, 1640, but it contains, besides several alterations, the following important additions: i. An account of Donne's marriage (pp. 15—18); ii. An account of Morton's attempt to persuade Donne to take orders (pp. 24—32); iii. Part of Chudleigh's Funeral Elegie (pp. 48—49); iv. Donne's grief at his wife's death (pp. 52—55); v. An account of the friendship of Henry King, Bishop of Chichester, and his proffered benefaction (pp. 67—72); vi. A relation of Donne's pleasure at hearing his Hymn sung; his seal; an enumeration of his friends; George Herbert and the lines that passed between them (pp. 77—85); vii. Donne's bequests (pp. 90—92); viii. An account of the making of the portrait of Donne in his shroud and of the stone effigy in St Paul's; ix. Four letters from Donne are printed together at the end (see no. 58).

APPENDICES I—V

APPENDIX I

WORKS BY JOHN DONNE, D.C.L.

Preface

John Donne the younger was born while his father was living at Pyrford in Surrey in 1604. He was sent to Westminster School, and in 1623 was elected a student at Christ Church, Oxford. Nothing is known of his life during the next ten years except that in 1629 his father had destined him for the Church, as appears from a passage in a letter to Mrs Cockain, in which he tries to console her for the death of her son by writing: "Since I am well content to send one son to the Church, the other to the Wars, why should I be loth to send one part of either son to heaven and the other to earth¹." In 1634 he was still at Oxford and a somewhat unpleasant incident is said to have taken place there; it is related² that in a fit of temper he struck a small boy with his riding whip, the child afterwards dying as the result of his injuries. Donne was tried at Oxford in August 1634 for manslaughter, but he was acquitted owing to the uncertainty of the medical evidence. Possibly as the result of this incident he proceeded soon afterwards to Padua and there took the degree of D.C.L. He returned in 1637 and was incorporated a D.C.L. at Oxford on June 30, 1638³. It was about the same time that he fulfilled his father's wishes by taking orders. He soon obtained preferment and on July 10, 1638, he was presented by the King to the rectory of High Roding in Essex. On June 10, 1639, he was presented to the rectory of Fulbeck in Lincolnshire, and about the same time to the rectory of Ufford, Northamptonshire, in the diocese of Lincoln¹. He continued to rise in the Church and in 1648 was chaplain to the Earl of Denbigh², to whom he dedicated the Fifty Sermons of 1649. From about the year 1640 he lived in Covent Garden and he may have been incumbent of some church in that district. His petition of 1661 on behalf of the inhabitants of Covent Garden is recorded here under entry no. 148. He died at the age of 58 in 1662, and his will (see no. 150) was printed as a broadside in February of the same year.

Meanwhile, from the year 1640 to the time of his death, he had been shewing considerable literary activity, and it is owing to his energy that the greater portion of his father's writings has been preserved for us. There is evidence that the elder Donne had early thought of his son as his future literary executor, for he had written to a friend from Chelsea on November 25, 1625: "I have revised as many of my sermons as I have kept any note of, and I have written out a great many, and hope to do more. I am already come to the number of eighty³, of which my son, who, I hope will take the same profession, or some other in the world of understanding, may hereafter make some use⁴." On the other hand Henry King, Bishop of Chichester, in a long letter written in 1640 to Izaak Walton, which was prefixed to the Lives in 1670, states that Donne professed before several witnesses on his death-bed "that it was by my restless importunity, that he had prepared them [the sermons] for the press"; he declares also that three days before his death Donne had made him his executor and given him the sermons, his sermon notes, "and his other papers, containing an extract of near Fifteen hundred Authors." He further hints that the younger Donne, using Walton as a go-between, had filched these papers from his keeping, and this was, indeed, probably the case, for in his will Donne makes the following bequest: "To the ³ This does not refer to the 80 Sermons of 1640, since twenty-six of the sermons in that collection are dated later than 1625, the year in which this letter was written. This was first pointed out by Mr F. E. Hutchinson in the Camb. Hist. of Eng. Lit. iv. 240-1.

⁴ Gosse, ii. 310.

Reverend Bishop of Chichester I return that Cabinet that was my Father's ...and all those Papers which are of Authors analysed by my Father." Donne states in his preface to the XXVI Sermons of 1660 that "upon the death of my father...I was sent to by His Majesty of Blessed Memory to recollect and publish his Sermons"; this may or may not have been true.

Donne's petition of 1637 to the Archbishop of Canterbury shews that already before this he had made an attempt to gain control of those others of his father's writings which had been published without his authority. The petitioner states "that since y^e death of his Father there hath bene manie scandalous Pamflets printed, and published, under his name, which were none of his, by severall Boocksellers, withoute anie leave or Autoritie; in particuler one entitold Juvenilia, printed for Henry Seale; another by John Marriott and William Sheares, entitold Ignatius his Conclave, as allsoe certaine Poems by y^e sayde John Marriote, of which abuses thay have bene often warned by your Pe^r and tolde that if thay desisted not, thay should be proceeded against beefore your Grace, which thay seeme soe much to slight, that thay profess soddainly to publish new impressions, verie much to the greife of your Pe^r and the discredite of y^e memorie of his Father¹." The Archbishop granted Donne's petition by calling upon those concerned to desist from their illegal practices, but his authority was ineffectual, and it was only in 1650 that Donne acquired control of his father's poems, in which year he published an edition with a dedication to Lord Craven. In 1644 he published his father's Biathanatos, and his presentation copies of this book with the letters contained in them have already been noticed (see pp. 62—63). In 1649 he issued the second volume of Fifty Sermons, and in an address to the Lords Commissioners of the Great Seal he indicates that he had not undertaken the publication of the sermons without some official reward. In a letter already quoted (p. 63) of about 1644 he shews that he had had these sermons ready and entered at Stationers' Hall, but that he had kept them back from fear of persecution by the Commonwealth government. In 1651 he published his father's Letters to several persons of honour, and in the same year he prepared the Essays in Divinity, which he incorporated in 1652 in the volume of Juvenilia together with a reprint of Ignatius his Conclave. In 1660 he issued the final volume of XXVI Sermons, this time at his own expense. In the same year he also edited both Sir Tobie Matthew's Collection of Letters, and a collection of poems by the Earl of Pembroke and Sir Benjamin Ruddier¹. His own work, entitled Donne's Satyr (no. 149), was published in 1662 ; it consists of somewhat obscene, though not very amusing, pleasantries.

The younger Donne's character has usually been held somewhat in contempt, and it is certain that he gives no particular sign of intellectual distinction and does not appear to have been remarkable either for honesty or for morality. Anthony a-Wood has characterised him as "an atheistical buffoon, a banterer, and a person of over free thoughts, yet valued by Charles II." The following little-known extracts may be quoted from two of his letters, which are unfortunately not dated :

"I receaued a letter from y^r Lp. this weeke, but it was rauished from mee by a verie handsome Ladie, who after shee had taken the pleasure of readinge it, tore it and burnt it ; a little more familiarity would haue giuen me a iust occasion to haue clapt her breech, and then I must haue faught with Sir Lionell the husband, for it is now cominge into fashion²."

"I hope, likewise, you haue not the feare of God before your eyes, and being ashamed of that, make Hine-head and Lob-lane your excuse ; if you haue, pray my Lord speake plaine, that if you are turned saint, we may deliuer you up to Satan, and keepe these Angels to ourselues³."

We are now, however, prying into his private life, and we must leave him with a remembrance of the gratitude due to him for his labours on behalf of the memory of his father.

APPENDIX II

WORKS BY JOHN DONE

Preface

The two dull and unimportant works by John Done called Polydoron and The Ancient History of the Septuagint have been persistently attributed to Donne, some colour being lent to this attribution by the fact that the publishers have falsely described Done on the title-page of the second edition of The History of the Septuagint as "the Learned and Reverend Dr John Done, late Dean of St. Pauls." An inquiry concerning Done, which was made in Notes and Queries (Ser. 6. vi. 47), elicited from the late Dr Augustus Jessopp the following reply : "It is one of the 'curiosities of literature' that this latter volume [The History of the Septuagint] should have been attributed to the Dean of St. Paul's by every editor of Walton's Lives till the mistake was pointed out by me in 1855. It is a trumpery production, and could never be set down to the great dean by any one at all familiar with his writings. I tried to find out something about the man Done twenty-five years ago, but I cannot lay my hands on my notes ; my impression is that he was a needy schoolmaster, who was employed by the booksellers." (N. & Q. Ser. 6. vi. 95, July, 1882.) A long letter from Done on alchemy is preserved in the Bodleian (Ashm. MS. 1415, f. 196).

151 POLYDORON.

12°. 1631

Title: Polydoron: or a miscellania of Morall, Philofophicall, and Theologicall sentences. [rule] By Iohn Done. [rule and device]
 Printed at London by Tho. Cotes, for George Gibbes dwelling in Popes-head Alley at the signe of the Flower de Luce. 1631.

Collation: A—I¹² K⁴; 112 leaves.

Contents: A1 blank except for sign.; A2 title; A3—A4a (both with sign. A4) To the Reader signed I. Done; A4b blank; A5—K4 (pp. 1—216) text (errata at bottom of K4b).

Note: Some copies have a leaf with dedication to the Earl of Dover and with signature A3 inserted between A2 and A3. In the BM copy this appears to be printed on a sheet of two leaves together with the first leaf of To the Reader, this sheet being inserted between A2 and A4. I am unable to explain the discrepancy. The device on the title-page of a fleur-de-lis within a border of leaves and berries is recorded as no. 415 in McKerrow's Printers' and Publishers' Devices, London, 1913.

APPENDIX V

ICONOGRAPHY

[This list is only intended to be a brief guide to the iconography of John Donne.]

A. Oil Paintings :

1. Bust, full face, with bare neck and a cloak round the shoulders. Circular. diameter 58 cm. Painted in 1631, aet. 59. Painter unknown. Now in the dining-room at the Deanery of St Paul's Cathedral.
An engraving after this portrait was made by Lombart in 1651 (see no. 5 below). The painting is reproduced in Gosse, frontispiece to vol. ii.
2. A replica or copy of no. 1. Now in the Dyce collection at the Victoria and Albert Museum, where it is ascribed to Cornelius Janssen.

B. Stone Effigy :

3. Full-size effigy of Donne in his shroud ; at his feet is an urn and above his head is a marble tablet with an epitaph written by himself. Carved in Italian marble by Nicholas Stone in 1631 after the portrait, which had been drawn on a board by an unnamed artist shortly before Donne's death. The effigy was originally within the choir in the south aisle of old St Paul's, and was the only monument, which was saved intact from the fire of 1666 ; it is now in a corresponding position in the present Cathedral. For further particulars of this effigy, see Walton's Life of Donne, 1658, pp. 111—114, and Gosse, ii. 280—288.

Engravings of the effigy were made by Marshall (no. 7 below) and by Hollar (no. 9 below). Photographs of it are reproduced in Gosse, vol. ii, facing p. 280.

C. Engravings :

4. 1591. Aet. 18. Bust, three-quarter face to right, in an oval 8.4 × 6.4 cm. Engraved in line and stipple by Marshall after an unknown painting ; lines by Walton below. Used as frontispiece to the second edition of the Poems, 1635, and to several subsequent editions (see nos. 79—83). Reproduced as frontispiece to Gosse, vol. i, as frontispiece to present work, and elsewhere.

5. 1631. Act. 59. Bust in an oval, 10.2 × 8.5 cm. Engraved in line by Lombart after no. 1 or 2 above. Used as frontispiece to the Letters, 1651 and 1654 (see nos. 55, 56); also in Walton's Lives, 1670 and 1675. Reproduced in Gosse, vol. ii, facing p. 80, and elsewhere.
6. Donne's head in a shroud, within an oval, 11.4 × 8.5 cm. Engraved in line by Droeshout after the stone effigy (no. 3 above) or the original drawing on a board. Used as frontispiece to Death's Duell, 1632 (see nos. 24—26). Copied by Skelton for Walton's Lives, ed. Zouch, 1796, etc. Reproduced in Gosse, vol. ii, facing p. 300, in present work, facing p. 27, and elsewhere.
7. Full-length in shroud, measuring, with decorations, 9.5 × 5 cm. Engraved by Marshall after the effigy in St Paul's. Used as frontispiece to the fourth and fifth editions of the Devotions, 1634 and 1638 (see nos. 39 and 40). Reproduced in Pickering's edition of the Devotions, 1840 (see no. 41), and facing p. 45 of present work.
8. 1614. Act. 42. Bust, three-quarter face to right, dressed in gown and ruff, within an oval, 9 × 6.5 cm. Engraved in line and stipple by Merian in the centre of the frontispiece to the 80 Sermons, 1640 (see no. 29). The original painting is unknown. The portrait alone was also used as a frontispiece to Walton's Life of Donne, 1658 (see no. 106). Copied by Skelton for Walton's Lives, ed. Zouch, 1796, etc. Reproduced in Gosse, vol. ii, facing p. 144, and facing p. 33 of present work.
9. Full-length in shroud, 30 × 10 cm. Engraved in line by Hollar after the effigy in St Paul's for Dugdale's History of St Paul's, 1658, p. 62.
10. Bust, three-quarter face to left, dressed in gown and ruff; rectangular, 9.6 × 7.6 cm. Engraved in line by A. Duncan after a drawing by G. Clint, A.R.A., "from an original picture in the possession of the Rev^d Dr Barrett."
A plate from Effigies Poeticæ, London, W. Walker, 1822, 8°; also india paper proofs on large paper. The original picture is not known to me. Reproduced in Gosse, vol. i, facing p. 304.
11. Bust, full-face, dressed in gown and broad linen collar, in an oval, 10.6 × 8.6 cm. Engraved in line and stipple by W. Holl, "from the original picture by Vandyke in the possession of F. Holbrooke, Esq." Used as frontispiece to Donne's Works, ed. Alford, 1839, vol. i (see no. 33). The head closely resembles that of the two oil paintings, nos. 1 and 2 above; the "original picture" is perhaps to be identified with no. 2, the dress having been slightly altered in the engraving.
12. Bust in an oval, 5.5 × 4.2 cm. Engraved by Alais after "a miniature painted in 1610 by Isaac Oliver." Used as frontispiece to Donne's Poems, ed. Grosart, 1872, vol. i (see no. 98). The miniature is not known to me.
